5 Tiny Press, a new grassroots, free, digital publishing 6 initiative, invites local residents to share their voices through its 7 platform.

8 With the mission to “foster a community of shared 9 stories, neighbor to neighbor,” Tiny Press representatives said in a 10 news release it serves as a “Small Press with Big Voices,”

11 showcasing the creative talents of people within the local 12 community.

13 Operating out of Brattleboro, Tiny Press provides a digital 14 stage for an array of creative media, including literature, music,
15 and visual and performing arts, the platform is designed to be a 16 comprehensive hub for local expression, opening a platform for 17 artistry and conversation.

18 “We believe everyone has a story worth telling,” the Tiny 19 Press team said. “Whether it’s through a haiku, a short story, a 20 digital art exhibit, or a musical score, Tiny Press is here to ensure 21 those voices are heard by their neighbors and beyond.”

22 Tiny Press supports creators of all ages through Tiny Kids, 23 dedicated to stories created by children; Teen Press, a space for 24 teen-focused narratives and experiences; and Community Stories, 25 a section highlighting the lived experiences of local residents.

26 Tiny Press said it is actively seeking new ideas and 27 submissions. Community members with a story, a song, or a pitch 28 for a creative project are encouraged to reach out.

29 The platform accepts literary submissions across a range 30 of genres, including fiction and nonfiction, and everything from 31 sci-fi and mystery to philosophy and existentialism. Poetry —
32 featuring lyrics, haikus, sonnets, and narrative poems — will be 33 on the site.

34 They also welcome submissions from the narrative arts
35 — such as scripts for theater, cinema, and documentaries — plus 36 digital music, musical scores, and experimental sound effects.
37 Comics, graphic stories, and digital art features are also accepted.

38 For more information, to read featured stories, or to 39 submit your work, visit tinypressworks.org and click on 40 Submission Guidelines, or contact them at
